

Mindful Internet Use

You need to check something on your phone or computer – a specific thing, not just browsing. Here’s how to get in, do the thing, and get out without falling down a rabbit hole.

State Your Why

Before you touch the device, ask:
“What is my good reason for going on?”

If you can’t name one,
don’t pick it up.

Label the Urge

Once you’re on, you’ll feel pulls to stray.
When you feel one, say in your head: “the urge.”

Labeling it weakens its grip.

Admit the Truth

If the urge is still winning, remind yourself:
“just a minute” really means 20+ min. of distraction.

Are you good with that?

Tip: Set a timer for how long the task should take before you go in.

Be patient with yourself. At first, you won’t think to label the urge until long after you’ve gotten distracted. That will change with practice.
